

— THE PREMIER JOURNAL — QUEZON CITY

Where the City Meets Its Quiet Center

An editorial introduction to Parklinks North & South Tower
— a residence shaped by greenery, geometry, and a generation of Ayala Land craftsmanship.

For the discerning few who measure home in decades, not square meters.

To our investors, principals, and families — welcome to the first issue of The Premier Journal. This is a quiet conversation, written for the few who already know what they are looking for: a residence that holds its composure over time, an address whose meaning compounds with the years, and a partner who treats discretion as a standard, not a service.

Inside, we look at one of the most considered new addresses in the metro, the shifting climate of Philippine luxury real estate, and a few quiet pleasures we believe make a residence feel like home.

TOWER

QUEZON CITY · 35 HA ESTATE

A residence inside the greenest urban estate in the metro.

Set within a 35-hectare master-planned estate where greenery is the architecture, Parklinks North and South Tower offer a way of living that very few addresses in the country can promise — calm, walkable, and quietly cinematic at every hour.

Interiors are organized around long sightlines and natural light, with finishes chosen for the way they age. Amenities are positioned to feel like a private resort club, not a building lobby.

The luxury inventory is quietly tightening.

Prime supply across Makati, BGC, and the new Ortigas–Quezon City corridor has continued to thin through the last twenty-four months. Developers with land banks of estate-scale quality are now the exception, not the norm.

At the same time, the country's high-net-worth population has grown faster than premier inventory can replace itself — and a meaningful share of that demand is being placed by Filipino principals returning home, not foreign capital.

Ayala Land's premier portfolio sits at the centre of this shift. Estate-driven projects like Parklinks remain among the few where land, design, and stewardship are held by one institution from masterplan to turnover.

For long-horizon buyers, the question has moved from where to buy to whether a comparable address will still be available next year.

"The most resilient addresses in this market are the ones that were never sold on price."

Three quiet pleasures of a Parklinks address.

Architecture, wellness, and the long view — the things a residence is finally judged on.

Architecture

THE DESIGN

A language that ages well.

Long horizontal lines, deep shaded balconies, and a restrained material palette — interiors built to feel current a decade from now, not just on turnover day.

Wellness

THE ESTATE

A green spine, not a corridor.

Parklinks is organised around a continuous park, not a road. Residents step out of the lobby into something closer to a botanical garden than a driveway.

Investment

THE TREND

Quezon City rising.

Infrastructure, schools, and head offices have moved north. The Ortigas–QC line is becoming the metro's third premier address — and prices still reflect the older perception.

The value of a premier address is not what it costs today — it is what it cannot be replicated tomorrow.

01

Compounding Value

Estate-led Ayala addresses have historically held and grown their value through every market cycle — because the land, the design, and the standard of stewardship are not separable.

02

Genuine Scarcity

There are only so many ways to assemble 35 hectares of contiguous prime land inside the metro. Parklinks is one of the last of its kind, not the first of many.

03

The Ayala Legacy

For more than eight decades, Ayala Land has built the addresses Filipino families pass to the next generation. The brand is not a marketing line — it is the resale value.

Thank you for the time you spent with this issue. A residence of this caliber is rarely a transaction — it is a relationship that begins long before the first viewing and continues long after turnover. Whenever you are ready, I would be honoured to walk you through it personally.
